WEDNESDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 21.

THE STONEWALL JACKSON.—While the bark Stonewall Jackson, of Boston, was on her late voyage from New York to Yokohama the captain sent a boat's crew to Ombay Island for water, a passenger accompanying them. Upon landing the men were surrounded by hundreds of natives in a perfect nude state. The chief seized the passenger and soon stripped him of his shirt, and the other natives treated the crew in the same manner, resistance being useless, as the islanders were armed with bows, arrows and clubs. As soon as they had removed all the shirts the natives began a wild dance, which broke up in a free fight for possession of the strange knives—the crew seeing the danger of their position the passenger and second mate drew their revolvers and fired into the crowd, who became panic-stricken and fled to the woods. The crew then ran for their boats and rowed back to the ship.
